VIOLA SWEET

In discussing "How to Keep Young" Wednesday afternoon at the Odd Fellows' hall, Viola Sweet said in part. "We become like those things to which we give our attention. Growing old, has become a habit of the race because of violation of nature's laws and giving our attention to thoughts of disease, decrepitude and old age. We can change this order of things by an intelligent understanding of the laws of the mind. Youth is retained or regained by observing the laws of health, harmony and growth. Keeping relaxed and having a keen interest in life are also very essential."

Those who heard Mrs. Sweet Wednesday night on "Worry—How to Quit It," certainly have no cause for worry today, as she brought a message of hope and encouragement to those who worry. She dwelt not so much on the evils of worry as on the methods of overcoming it. She explained how by wisely directing the vivid imaginaton and abundance of energy whch one posseses the worrier could become a genius instead.

"The Story Your Face Tells' was the subject yesterday afternoon and last night her subject was "Why You Are Where You Are." Mrs. Sweet says, "Man is the architect of his future. He builds ino each day what he held in thought yesterday. He is weak or strong, rich or poor, great or small, according to how he manipulates his thinkng. By holding an ever-ascending thought toward better conditions he develops his inherent ability. Truly, 'As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he. We think in pictures and these pictures become realities, whether they depict sickness and lack or health and abundance. The thoughts of today become the dreams of tonight, the actions of tomorrow and the character and destiny of the future."

Mrs. Lida Ruth Medefind and Mr. N. L. Wallace have delighted the audience each evening with a musical program preceding the lecture.

Thursday night concluded the series of free lectures but a paid lecture for women only is given this afternoon on "The Psychology of Sex," and the paid class work begins tonight and will continue for six evenings.

Proceedings Underway For Creation of Joint Highway District with S. F.

Alameda de las Pulgas Seen As New County Highway Project

A movement which will eventually result in the creation of a new highway the length of the peninsula and a new and unobstructed entrance into San Francisco was begun Monday by action of the board of supervisors of San Francisco. The action by the San Francisco board was the appointment of a commission to meet with the board of supervisors of this county for the formation of a joint road district.

The object of the joint district will be the widening and extension of Junipero Serra boulevard west of Daly City and Colma to join with the proposed central high way. This latter will be an extension and linking together o the present Alameda de las Pulgas.

The extension and widening of the Junipero road and its linking up with the proposed reopening of the former Alameda de las Pulgas will break the "bottle-neck" of Colma and Daly City, which transportation students declare has only been moved sligtly northward with the $1,000,000 widening now under way at Lawndale.

North of Lawndale, despite the present great improvement north bound motor travel is faced with threading the congested Mission district of San Francisco, or turning west over School street and along the narrow Junipero road thence over Nineteenth avenue good roads boosters of the Peninsula have pointed out.

Plans and specifications for the widening and straightening o the present sections of the Alameda as well as the construction of connecting links are now being prepared by the county engineer Rights of way for the connecting links have been secured, and in order to facilitate the description of the road, the various units o way which will be linked togeth er have been changed in name to Alameda de las Pulgas.

The new highway will pas through the western end of Red wood City and will follow the present route from the Belmont-Half moon Bay road to Mayfield

The formation of the joint road district for financing the extension of the Junipero road and its connection with the new highway through the central part of the county to Stanford University will be a long step toward final breaking of the bottle-neck conditions which have restricted Peninsula motor travel for years, it was declared by those in touch with the situation.

The special conference committee of the San Francisco board will be headed by Supervisor W. H. Harrelson, who as chairman of the former streets committee, started the negotiations which culminated in the program for the breaking of the Colma bottle-neck. The other members will be Supervisors Milton Marks, John B. Badaracco and Charles F. Todd of the street committee. Marks made the motion for the special committee, which was seconded by Badaracco.

The action of the San Francisco board followed the appearance before that body last week of Fred Drake, real estate operator of San Carlos and president of the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce. Drake pointed out to the San Francisco supervisors the advantages of the proposed action and explained the plans of the San Mateo board for the construction of the new highway through the county. The resolution as passed by the board of supervisors of San Francisco was as follows:

"Whereas public interest and necessity requires the construction of a public highway, the general location and course of which shall be, commencing in the city and county of San Franisco at a point of connection with a main public highway already existing and known as the Junipero Serra boulevard, and extending southerly into the county of San Mateo at a suitable location between the present State highway and the Skyline boulevard, therefore be it.

"Resolved, That it is proposed to create a joint highway district as provided by an act of the legislature of the state of California, entitled an 'act providing for the creation, organization and government if joint highway districts composed of two or more counties of the state of California,' approved April 15, 1917, and the city and county of San Francisco and the county of San Mateo are hereby named as the counties interested in and which will be benefited by such highway construction, and be it further,

"Resolved, That the clerk of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco is hereby directed to transmit a certified copy of this resolution to the clerk of the board of supervisors of San Mateo county."

A meeting of the commission from San Francisco with the board of supervisors of this county will be held in the very near future. Following this it is expected that the formation of the district will be speeded up and plans prepared for the proposed work.

Fire which broke out in the yards of the Santa Barbara Lumber Company last week caused damage estimated at $100,000 half an hour later and valiant efforts were made by the city fire department, aided by San Francisco delegates of the American Legion here in convention to stop its spread. The night had been one of stormy celebration in the city, American Legion delegations from many cities parading the streets and campaigning for convention votes and when the fire broke out the streets were crowded with merrymakers.

The first two buildings to be erected as a part of the University of California University plans for the Westwood Hills site, Los Angeles, will cost approximately $1,600,000, according to partially confirmed reports current in university circles this week. An estimated cost of $800,000 each has been placed on both the auditorium and library structures, the plans for which have been completed and bids are to be called between August 1 and 10.

A $150,000 bread plant will rise at the northwest corner of North Main street and Roe Drive, Santa Ana, ground for the establishment being broken this week by the Kilpatrick Baking Company. The new Kilpatrick plant, when completed will employ more than fifty men and will have an average pay roll of from $2500 to $3000 weekly. The building itself will be of Spanish architecture, finished in white stucco with red til roof, fireproof throughout, and will have 20,000 feet of floor space.

Bids were called for last week and final plans approved for a two-million dollar theatre to be built immediately on a site bounded by Market, Hayes and Polk streets, San Francisco by the Capital Company, a subsidiary of he Bank of Italy. William Fox has taken a 25-year lease on the theatre, which will have a seating capacity of 4,570 persons. The new playhouse which will be known as the Capital will be the equivalent of nine stories in height, and plans are so drawn that at some future time, nine additional stories may be built atop the theatre, and eighteen stories in the gore of Market and Larkin streets to house a thousand-room hotel.

Sixteen states will be represented at the 1927 annual Pacific Coast Dairy Show to be held in Oakland, November 14th to 19th, Robert E. Jones, secretary and manager of the show, San Diego, declared before the California Dairy Council meeting. There will be over 1,000 exhibits, he declared. Canada is taking an interest in the dairy situation and is to be represented at the show, Jones said.

The third annual show of the State Flower and Horticultural Exhibition will be held at Montebello on September 30 and October 1 and 2, according to the National Automobile Club. Because of the topography of Montebello, it is largely free from devastating winds and frosts, and for this reason has become the home of numerous nurseries and cut-flower growing organizations. Here are propagated and grown the stately and ornate boxwoods, coco palms, delicate Kentias and many other ornamental shrubs. Judges have been chosen from all parts of the State and each is an expert in this line. Prizes are to be awarded winners of each group of exhibits.

California flappers a few generations hence may be getting their silken stockings right off the neighborhood mulberry bush. William Oliver Mills of Berkeley, a former silk manufacturer, expresses the belief, for instance, that this section of the country could raise all the raw silk needed by the entire United States. "Silk can be produced for $4.75 a pound on plantations in California," says Mills. "This is the cost of everything from raising the worm to selling the silk. The selling price of silk is now $7 a pound which allows for a large profit to the producer."

The local engineering department of the American Can Company is completing plans for a one and two-story reinforced concrete factory and warehouse building and a one-story frame and stucco office building. The structures are to be erected in the tract bounded by Ocean and Eardley avenues, Sloat boulevard and Dewey avenue, Pacific Grove, Monterey county. Plans are being prepared under the supervision of C. G. Preis, chief engineer of the company of New York. The improvements will cost about $600,000.

Five carloads of thoroughbred horses, valued at more than $1,000,000 and entered in California exhibits last week arrived from the East and Canada for the horse show to be held at Palo Alto August 8 to 13.

Kern county residents own 26,888 motor vehicles, of which 3,891 are trucks, and 177 motorcycles, according to a compilation made by J. B. Best, manager, Bakersfield branch of the Automobile Club of Southern California. Of the 22,820 pleasure or business automobiles means one automobile for approximately every three inhabitants of the county.

Ground was broken for the new $4,000,000 plant of the Pacific Goodrich Rubber Company last week on the site at Industrial and Mines avenues, Los Angeles. The plant is expected to start operations on or about March 1, 1928, and will employ about 1500 persons. The plant is to be of California Mission architect and the grounds will be landscaped to avoid the appearance of an ordinary factory. Cost of the building and equipment was estimated at approximately $3,000,000 which, added to the cost of the site, makes the total approximately $4,000,000.

FAMOUS MINING STRIKES

By THOMAS E. STEWARD

California Gulch

MANY a wagon that bore westward in the summer of 1859 bearing the legend, "Pike's Peak or Bust," was to be soon homeward bound the next year with the first brave slogan wiped out, and in its place the single word, "Busted."

But some of those who failed of success in that rush were of sterner stuff. They pressed on across the Colorado range and found gold-bearing gravel in South Park.

In the spring of 1860 some of these dauntless prospectors worked their way across the second range into the headwaters of the Arkansas river, from which many millions of dollars' worth of placer gold was destined to be washed.

No sooner had the first parties worked their way into this rich territory than gold strikes were reported in what was known as California Gulch. Slater, Currier, Rafferty, Stevens and Tabor were names among the earliest of those who found the coveted treasure.

The most astounding thing about the California Gulch strikes was the rapidity with which the news spread. Although the region was one of the wildest into which prospectors had yet ventured and almost no one had even traveled through the region prior to the strikes of 1860, seventy prospectors poured into the gulch within a few days after word of the discovery had gone out. By July 10,000 persons were in the camp, according to the estimate of S. F. Emmons, geologist in charge of the United States geological survey in 1885, who studied the history of the place. It was said that $2,000,000 worth of placer gold was taken out the first summer, though Emmons considered this an exaggeration.

The characteristics of a mining camp based on placer gold rather than on the more substantial "rock in place" type of diggings, which is to say, the true lode or vein, soon manifested themselves in California Gulch. Once the richest yield of the placer cradles had been extracted the population began to diminish swiftly. In three or four years' time, only hundreds remained where there had been thousands. Kellogg and other prospectors of the restless type sought newer fields. Tabor, settling down to the business of running the only store in the place, thereby put himself in the way of fortune, for it was a grubstake from that store that led to the discovery of the Fryer hill deposits in which was later to be Leadville.

Homestake and the Black Hills

THAT the rich gold deposits of the Black Hills in South Dakota should have remained practically untouched until after 1880 was due chiefly to the jealousy with which the Sioux Indians kept whites off the mammoth reservation that had been given them by the government under the treaty of 1858. This treaty guaranteed the Sioux against the encroachment of white men.

Stories of Black Hills gold originated in the tales told by a Belgian priest, Father De Smet, who lived with the Sioux in the first half of the Nineteenth century and reported many finds of nuggets.

In 1874 the government sent General Custer to make a military reconnoissance of the region, and he took with him Prof. N. H. Winchell, a famous geologist of the University of Minnesota, who later played a big part in the discovery of Minnesota's iron deposits. Gold was discovered by this party, and as a result of their reports a party of miners who thought themselves strong enough to fight off the Sioux, established themselves in a blockade on French creek. The government, however, lived up to its treaty and brought them out. But news of the gold strike had spread and the invasion of the Indian reservation now seemed inevitable.

In 1875 the government sent another party to prospect the Black Hills under strong military escort. This expedition confined its attentions chiefly to the southern part of the hills because of the dense forests that made the more northern areas practically inaccessible. It did not even reach the region of the Homestake mine. One of the geologists found abundant gold in the Whitewood and Deadwood gulches and described them as "the best place in the hills for a poor miner."

Much of the gold district of the northern Black Hills has been referred to as the "Homestake" without discrimination between a number of properties of which that particular mine is one. The Homestake and the Old Abe deposit, nearby, are said to have been located in 1876 by two French boys, Moses and Frederick Manuel. The Homestake property passed into the hands of a group of well known mining capitalists, among them J. B. Haggin and George Hearst, the father of William Randolph Hearst. The son is still a prominent owner in the property and its profits helped support his papers in their early days.

This mine is celebrated among geologists as one that has always been made to pay although the ore on which it is based is not of a particularly rich variety. The splendid technical skill with which operations have been carried on, however, has made it famous for its profits.

Valuable Discovery

A few years ago a German professor stumbled upon the discovery of soluble glass, which he made from silica, with soda and potash combined. This is now extensively used for rendering woodwork incombustible and marble and plaster secure against atmospheric agents, as a vehicle for mineral colors, in a kind of fresco painting to be exposed to the weather, in the manufacture of artificial stone and in the composition of fireproof cements for stoves, etc.

Hoover Is Logical Man

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S statement that he did not choose to be a candidate for the presidency in 1928 has given rise to much speculation as to his successor, and indications from all over the country point to Herbert C. Hoover as the most probable man for the place. Mr. Hoover has certainly placed himself in a position before the American people which has rarely been attained by any other individual. By his record as reviewed it is seen that this has always been his way of doing. There is, perhaps, no businessman in America who has been so successful as Mr. Hoover has been. Beginning with his graduation from Stanford University he grasped every opportunity which presented itself and in a few years was the highest salaried graduate of that institution and the head of one of the largest mining and promotion concerns in the world. At the opening of the World war, while the European representative of his company he personally took charge of the relief for all of the Americans sojourning on the continent and not only saw that they were all safely at home, but also turned his attention and energy to the feeding of a starving nation. When Belgium was safely on the road to rehabilitation he was requested to take care of conditions in the United States, and the manner in which he displayed his talent rapidly coined for the world a new word, that of "hoverizing." Hoover was so successful in his conduct of affairs in the United States that the president of our country saw fit to entrust to him work of a very particular nature. This work was accomplished successfully and at the beginning of the new administration he became Secretary of Commerce, a position which had heretofore been of little importance. Because of his business acumen the portfolio of commerce became one of the most important in the affairs of the government, and the present president of the United States has leaned more heavily upon the Secretary of Commerce than he has upon any other of his department heads. Mr. Hoover has made a most enviable reputation as an advisor to the president. Not only has he done this work well, but during the late disaster in the south he personally took charge of flood conditions and because of his experience gained in Belgium was able in a short time to bring order out of chaos, and it is more than probable should he be given the Republican nomination he will be the first Republican to ever break the "solid south" as he has made himself beloved in all that part of the United States.

Herbert C. Hoover is the logical man for the presidency. His training in big business has given him the vision; his farsighted policies have particularly fitted him for an executive position; his world assocations have given him an understanding of foreign affairs and conditions which few people have ever had. All in all Herbert C. Hoover is the ideal man for the presidency of the United States and because of all of his connections we predict that he will be the choice of the Republican party for the presidency at San Francisco next year.

Prepare For Growth

OWING to the crowded condition of the various departments of the courthouse it will only be a short time when provisions will have to be made for an addition to the building now inadequate to house all the various departments of the county officials. Several offices are being operated in the basement of the building, having no room upstairs. The clerk's office needs at least two more rooms. The tax collector's office, the auditor's office, the assessor and the recorder all need larger quarters. The rapid growth of the county necessitates more county business and larger quarters are required to transact it. The supervisors should begin at once to raise funds to meet the new conditions. A building fund ought to be established and every year a certain sum raised by taxation until sufficient money is secured to start the new structure. The old court house destroyed by the earthquake was built by funds secured in this way. No bond issue was required, so when the structure was finished there was sufficient money to pay all costs of building. At the time numerous taxpayers started a howl about the supposed extra tax. When told that no bond issue would be required and the money for the building had already been raised by a small levy of taxes several years previous they became surprised and were loud in their praises of the supervisors for their vision and acumen in thus making provisions for the contemplated emergency.

If the present board of supervisors will insert in the next budget a small levy for the building fund, and every year for several years continue this practice until sufficient money is obtained to go on with the addition to the present building, the taxpayers will be saved money and the board of supervisors will have exercised a constructive force and displayed their vision Otherwise a big bond issue will have to be called which means a heavy burden to the taxpayers of the county. This thought is worth considering.

Warning Needed

THERE is, we believe, a menace to traffic on the highway when the fire truck has to cross, as it has so often within the past few months. Now that arterial stop signs have been placed at every corner of the highway, traffic is less likely to be on the lookout for a fire truck from a side street, and when there are many machines on the highway, the noise is often so great that the sound of the sirens could easily be unnoticed.

We believe that if a loud siren were installed on the "silent policeman" at the corner of Broadway and the highway to be sounded from the fire house when ever a call is received from west of the highway, that it would add greatly to the safety of travel at that point. Eventually, we believe, that as traffic congestion increases signals will be necessary on each highway corner similar to the gongs used in San Francisco. But for the present a siren or gong at the point we have mentioned would serve an important purpose and might, perhaps effect a great saving to the city and to the people on the highway.

The team was stopped at Mound street after an exciting race of several hundred yards.

"In the art gallery will be pictures from the brushes of celebrated artists. Women's work, such as laces, embroidery and hand palated China will be on display.

"The handiwork of children from kindergarten through high school will be exhibited. The display will be a great attraction for both children and adults."

Mrs. Jane Amundsen, assistant to the directors in charge of the educational department, is now engaged in arranging space for the exhibits. Thousands of dollars in cash prizes, as well as special awards and trophies, will be distributed to the winners in this division.

Business Selling Kiwanis Club Topic

"Putting the Biz in Business" was the topic of an address before the Redwood City Kiwanis Club Wednesday by P. M. Arnold of the Arnold Sales Training Institute of Los Angeles. Arnold stressed the need of personality in business and of keeping in a cheerful and optimistic frame of mind.

The chairman of Wednesday's meeting was Roscoe Stevens, proprietor of the Nipa Hut on the highway, who has recently returned from the Yosemite Valley, where he spent several months serving his famous orange juice.

Stevens and D. W. Williams, who has recently returned from a trip of several months in Europe were re-enstated in the club, from which they withdrew before leaving.

Prisoner Admits Part In Peninsula Robberies

Paul Roland, alias Paul Buba, 35, a tailor arrested here Monday by Sheriff J. J. McGrath and Deputy Jules Jarra in connection with a burglary in Burlingame, has confessed to a list of burglaries covering the whole length of the peninsula. The confession made by Roland to District Attorney Swart include burglaries made in North Palo Alto, Belmont, San Carlos, San Mateo, Burlingame and other parts of the county. The confession covered the burglarizing of more than twenty homes and places of business in this county within the past three months.

Roland appeared before Judge Geo. H. Buck Tuesday for sentence and was sent over for 1 to 15 years in the penitentary. Roland's sentence comes under the provisions of the new parole law which became effective on July 29, and as this is the second time that he has been in the tolls of the law he will not be able to apply for parole for at least 12 years. Roland was wanted by the State Reformatory of Illinois for violating a three-year sentence.

The detection of the burglaries which Roland afterwards confessed was made by a finger print study by Deputy Sheriff Edward Farrell.

Popular Young Woman Dies While Vacationing

The news of the death of Mrs. S. D. Tinker while vacationing with her family in Oregon was received this week and was a severe shock to her many friends in this city. Mrs. Tinker with her husband and two sons, Martin and Tom Tinker, left recently for a trip through the northwest, and was at that time, apparently in the best of health.

Mrs. Tinker was taken ill while visiting relatives in Oregon and was rushed to a hospital in Portland, where it was found that a mastoid operation would be necessary. This was followed by complications which resulted in her death.

The deceased was a well-known and popular member of this community. She was a member of St. Peter's Episcopal church and a tireless worker in all affairs of that church. The family have made their home on Hudson street in this city for a number of years. Funeral services were held in Portland, Oregon.

COMMISSIONEERS ARE APPOINTED TO APPRAISE PROPERTY ON EXTENSION

Following the overruling recently of a protest against the extension of Broadway by an improvement district, the board of trustees have determined to speed up the necessary preliminary proceedings, and on Tuesday appointed a board of commissioners to appraise the property which will be needed for the extension. Those appointed on the commission are L. A. Heiner, E. B. Fox and Lester Prior.

This commission will appraise the property and will later submit a report to the board of trustees. Immediately upon the acquisition of the property by the city, actual work on the extension of the street will be commenced.

Property owners between Walnut street and Chestnut street have signified their intention of carrying on the extension at their own expense and deeding the right-of-way to the city. It is also expected that the street will be extended to form a direct route to Dumbarton bridge.

South Redwood Residents Organize Booster Club

The South Redwood Booster Clhb was organized this week by residents of the South Redwood district, the territory recently added to Redwood City by annexation. The booster club is organized for the purpose of improving the district and for securing better conditions for its residents. The organization meeting was held Friday evening at Woodrow Inn on the Woodside road. About forty residents of the district were in attendance.

A temporary set of officers was elected at the meeting as follows: George F. Paul, president; C. E. Bunyard, secretary; and Joseph Canepa, treasurer. The next meeting of the organization will be held at the same place this evening.

Old Hen Causes Furore In City Police Circles

An old hen coming to town on Monday caused quite a commotion on Broadway, when she broke from a passing automobile and landed on the sidewalk opposite Donnelly's real estate office. Attached to one of her legs was a long rope but this handicap did not deter her from marching down Broadway to the intersection of Main, where she crossed over and came down the other side of the street displaying her wonderful plumage. Chicken-like she evidently desired to show off her fine feathers. As she passed along several of Redwood City's citizens looked askance muttering something like, "wouldn't we like to have her in a stew." The owner telephoned to Chief of Police Collins soliciting his aid in securing his old hen. The chief mustered his force and sallied forth to capture the lost individual. At the corner of Washington and Broadway he saw the object of his search proudly coming towards him. Collins is always a very serious officer and took the telephone message 'literally' and supposed a husband was looking for his better half, who had ran away from him after a quarrel. Much to his chagrin the chief captured the fowl without much difficulty.

CRUELTY CHARGED IN DIVORCE SUIT FILED

Alleging that his wife attacked him with a butcher knife on the 5th of this month, and that on three occasions she had attempted to commit suicide, Joseph Masaro this week filed suit for divorce in the Superior court here. The couple were married September 15, 1923, and separated on August 5. They have one child, a daughter, whose custody the plaintiff seeks.

Large Mineral Exhibit Planned For State Fair

An exhibit representing the untold millions in the state's mineral wealth will be shown at the State Fair. Twenty counties will participate in this exhibit and will show precious metals, commercial minerals and precious stones. The exhibit is being gathered by R. L. Kimmel, manager of the mining department of the Sacramento Chamber of Commerce. One of the featores of the display will be a replica of the first gold flake found by James Marshall in 1848. This replica was made from the original in the Smithsonian Institute.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER PERILED IN WRECKED AUTO

Blinded by smoke from burning grass while driving on the state highway Tuesday, Mrs. W. J. Wagner of San Francisco drove her car into a ditch beside the road and as it turned over, was pinned beneath the machine in a burning field. With Mrs. Wagner in the car was her 18-year-old daughter, Miss Mary Wagner.

Before Mrs. Wagner could be rescued by passing motorists her face, head and hands were badly burned by the flames from the burning grass. The daughter was uninjured. The mother was treated for burns and bruises at the Redwood City hospital. Mrs. Wagner is the owner of a summer home at Emerald Lake in this city.

Failure to Provide Results in Arrest

Failure to provide for a wife and seven children resulted in the arrest this week of William Hartlett, a carpener, formerly of 630 Whipple avenue. Hartlett was removed by Burlingame police from a bus bound for San Francisco upon a warrant sworn to by his wife, Mrs. May Hartlett. The arrest was made by the Burlingame officers at the request of the Redwood City police department.

Our Quarterly Extra Value Event

For purposes of accounting we divide the year into "periods" of three months or "quarters." The second "period" of this year closed June 30. It requires some time to compile the figures and know just what the results of the period's operations were. These figures are in now and they are exceedingly gratifying. We are more than pleased with both total sales and net profits. They show, very clearly, that Safeway stores, Safeway methods, Safeway merchandise, and Safeway men have won the hearty approval of food buyers throughout the West.

Inspired by this splendid showing we want to do something extra for our patrons. So, on the dates shown at the top of this ad, we offer the folks of this city and vicinity a wide variety of exceptional values in staple, high quality food stuffs. This is an unusual opportunity to save and we urge you to take full advantage of it.

Cement Company Seeks Lower Rates

Pacific Portland Cement Company and Henry Cowell Lime and Cement Company have filed a complaint with the Railroad Commission against the Southern Pacific Company, the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Se Railway Company, and Bay Point and Clayton Railroad Company, alleging that defendant carriers collected, and are collecting rates for the transportation of cement in carload lots from Cowell, Contra Costa county and Redwood City, San Mateo county, to Merced, Valley Springs and Fresno, and asking the Railroad Commission to require defendant to publish reasonable rates for the transportation of cement in carloads from Cowell and Redwood City to points between Stockton and Bakersfield, and for such other relief as may be proper.

"THE WAY OF ALL FLESH," A MOTION PICTURE MARVEL

"The masterpiece of the motion picture maker's art. An epic of the life of a common man that combines the delicacy of a Rembrandt, the sweep of a Velasquez, the power of a Wagner and the dramatic touch of a Victor Hugo."

These are the words spoken in praise of "The Way of All Flesh," the picture, reaching the Sequoia Theatre Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, which is among the ten greatest pictures ever made.

Critics have declared that the thing most impressive about "The Way of All Flesh" is its humanness, its dramatic simplicity and the vividness of its central character as played by the man who made "The Last Laugh" and "Variety" what they were.

Jannings himself considers it the finest effort of his life.

Support worthy of his talents was given him by Paramount Famous Lasky. Belle Bennett, the wife, heads the featured cast. Miss Bennett's "Stella Dallas" is one of the screen's never-to-be-forgotten characters. Another who gave up her starring rights for the Jannings picture is Phyllis Haver, considered by many the most beautiful blonde in America. Others in the cast are of equal importance and ability, notably Donald Keith and Fred Kohler.

The picture was directed by Victor Fleming, who made "The Rough Riders" "Mantrap" and many other box office winners.

Local Man Files Suit Following Auto Wreck

Suit was filed in the Superior court here this week by Walter Badie through his attorneys, Ross & Ross. The suit is for $1000 damages and names Jack Doyle and Harry Taylor as defendants Badie alleges that his car was wrecked near Woodside on April 23 by a car belonging to the defendants.

Local Man Held On Serious Charge

Archie Mayberry, 30, a truck driver of this city, was taken into custody this week by Sheriff McGrath and Deputy Jules Jara. Mayberry is charged with a statutory offense against a local girl. He is now at liberty on $2,000 cash bail.

Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Erickson and neice are spending a few weeks in a motor trip through tht northern part of the state and into Oregon.

Grass Fires Call Out Fire Department Cars

Twice on Tuesday evening the fire truck was called to answer a call outside of the city limits. The first call was when a brush fire swept several acres of hill land just west of this city. A second call was received from the same district shortly afterwards when it was reported that a house was on fire in the hills. The house proved to be a pile of brush which was being burned.

Shortly after noon Wednesday, the department responded to a call for a grass fire just south of Five Points. This was extinguished after a short time of fighting with wet sacks. No damage was done.

RELEASED FROM JAIL AFTER PAYING FINE

After staying in the local jail for 50 days, Francis Guterrez, sentenced on June 23 to a fine of $300 by City Recorder Mansfield on a charge of illegal possession of liquor, this week paid the remainder of his fine and was released. In lieu of the fine Gutterez was to spend 150 days in the county jail.

DURING VACATION BE SURE YOUR DRINKING WATER IS PURE

By D. Homer Junkin, M. D.
Idaho Falls, Idaho
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

The highways are flooded with pleasure seekers taking advantage of the automobile as a means of transportation. Many traveling overland carry their baggage for camping while cities and towns provide camp sites to accommodate the traveler. In most camps fairly good hygienic accommodations are to be had; but there are camps supplied by unhealthy water and with open vaults for excreta from the body, and such camps are a source of danger to the camper.

Travelers also frequently camp near a stream or near the highway and there cook meals, do their washing, and perform other usual necessities. The water secured from nearby streams is used for cooking and drinking purposes. This practice certainly furnishes a source of infection to the camper.

Many who travel through the mountainous countries think of the streams flowing through the valleys and in the mountains as the acme of purity. This is erroneous. The penetration of man deep into the heretofore haunts of only wild beasts of the forest has all too often carried pollution into these streams. Then again the practice of irrigation of the lands in these districts infects the streams. The water flowing over the land absorbs pollution of human origin.

Water-borne diseases make the consideration of hygiene important to everyone. Not only is it important to the traveler, but to each individual in his community. It is the duty of each of us to interest himself in the source of water supply and the system by which the sewage is carried away from our community.

A certain city of 15,000 population had a typhoid epidemic. Investigation showed that the main sewer of the city emptied into the river about one hundred yards above the intake of the water supply to the city. Another smaller city obtained its water supply from a so-called deep well. The incident of typhoid in this community was directly traceable to a surface leak whereby polluted surface drainage found its way into the well, thence to the community, resulting in many cases of typhoid.

A brief discussion of typhoid fever may be helpful in assisting the individual to broaden his interest in hygiene. Typhoid is perhaps the most common of water-borne diseases. When we say "water-borne" it is necessary for clarity to tell you that typhoid may also be carried in food stuffs like oysters, celery, and other foods coming into contact with polluted water or carried by flies or infected fingers of individuals caring for typhoid patients.

Typhoid fever is very common in many parts of the United States in the spring and fall. It is due to a germ known as the typhoid bacillus, which organism must be ingested or eaten by the individual in order for infection to occur. The course of the disease runs for a period of from six to eight weeks, and sometimes much longer. It carries a death rate of from seven to fourteen per cent, and often leaves those who recover with permanent lesions.

It is well to know that the use of vaccine prevents typhoid fever. The United Stataes Army is rendered practically free of typhoid fever by its use. Certainly in households where typhoid fever exists the remaining uninfected members should receive the vaccine. Individuals traveling into areas overcrowding has resulted, as from the recent flood areas, would be justified in being vaccinated against typhoid before going into such areas.

When in doubt about the purity of water, boil it. Take no chances with a disease whose death rate is so high.

CORRECTLY FITTED GLASSES OF LITTLE VALUE IF YOU OVER-WORK YOUR EYES

By Hamilton Stillson, M. D.
Seattle, Washington
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

Editor's Note: Readers who desire articles written on specific subjects are invited to make their request to the Gorgas Memorial through the Times-Gazette.

Do not expect your new pair of glasses to relieve your eye-strain if you continue to do the things that have been causing your eye-strain. Glasses can only „focus" rays of light. They con not do the seeing.

Indeed, the eyes are not alone responsible for the eye-sight. We see with the brain and the whole nervous system, with the mind's eye, as Shakespeare says. Though the new glasses may be just right for your eyes you may expect your eyes to become strained and tired if you continue to use them as before.

Eyes become tired if used too long at a time. They tire if you try to use poor print; if the light is not right; if the position of the book or the head is not correct for comfortable reading; if you try to read while sick or tired; if the air in the room is too hot or too stuffy, and so on. All this whether you have just purchased a new pair of glasses or not, whether your glasses are suitable for your eyes or not. All this, too, even though there is nothing radically wrong with your eyes except the need of glasses.

Of course if you have some disease of the eyes; if the clear parts of the eyes are cloudy; if the eyes are inflamed and painful; if there is trouble in the stomach or kidneys or liver or other organs intimately connected with the well-being of the eyes you will not expect a new pair of glasses to enable you to read or sew with entire satisfaction.

These things are mentioned for the reason that many persons keep buying one pair of glasses after another and getting no satisfaction out of any of them. Glasses are offered for sale by department stores and by spectacle stores along the street; and the salesmen are there solely to make sales.

While you continue to try new glasses you may be letting some disease of the eye get beyond control. You may be injuring your eyes, straining them, when they should have rest or perhaps medical attention. Indeed, you may be neglecting some systemic disease of which the eye symptoms are warnings. Many eye symptoms are really symptoms of general disease as well as disease of the eyes. When your glasses are not satisfactory go to a physician-oculist and get a good thorough physical examination and find out how much of your trouble is from the eyes, how much from wrong use of your eyes or from the presence of disease in your body that may affect the eyes. If a new pair of glasses is needed he will be able to tell you. If new glasses will not be satisfactory he will tell you that as well.

STORY FROM THE START

Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of weakened lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkwan. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realizes cost him the love of his fiancee, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer. With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his firm friend, Garth meets Doctor Quarrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarrier complains he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald." At Elkwan an Indian girl, Ninda, tuberculosis victim, whom Garth has befriended, is dying. Joan, trained war nurse, cares for Ninda, but the girl dies. Charles Guthrie writes reproaching his brother for not coming home. Charles' wife assures him Ethel still loves him, but Garth in his heart knows better.

"It was an act of Providence. I wonder," he hesitated, then went on, "if you would care to send word of yourself to an exile, this winter?"

He saw her brows contract in thought. For a moment she seemed in doubt, then turned to him, tense in her earnestness. "You are not merely courteous—you really wish to hear from me?"

His face reflected his pleasure. "You will write then, to the exile?"

There was a sudden gleam of white teeth, a whimsical flash in her eyes, as she asked: "Wouldn't it be ungrateful to refuse so modest a request from one who has rescued the shipwrecked?"

"It would be most ungrateful and cruel," he laughed. "If you'll write, I'll have a little spruce waiting for the Christmas mail, and hang your letter on the tree, with candles."

"Unread?"

"Unread till Christmas morning. Then Shot and I will read it together—our Christmas, from you."

"And the other letters?" she queried, avoiding his quick glance.

"The others? Oh, they'll not be interesting—with their criticism and advice and news of my distinguished brother's doings."

"None of them?" Joan Quarrier's voice was strangely throaty as she gazed out over the shimmering river.

"None of them," was the quiet reply. He thrilled to the realization of the absolute sincerity of his answer.

Without meeting his eyes, she turned impulsively to the airedale who accompanied them. "Good-by, Shot! I'm going to miss you, boy!" And she took the head of the dog in her hand. As Shot's tail beat the air, his hairy throat rumbled. Then he bared his great fangs and made little snaps at the girl bending over him.

"Why, you've made a conquest!" cried Guthrie. "He does that with no one here."

The girl looked up as she rubbed the dog's ears. "He's only saluting a brother—I mean a sister—in arms."

"One who served, as he did, with the wounded," added the man.

They were at the door of the mission.

"Good-by! The days will drag up there in the snow, waiting for the Christmas mail," said Guthrie, puzzled at his emotion—strangely reluctant to leave her—wondering at himself.

"Good-by, Mr. Exile!" She gave him her firm hand.

Hardly conscious of his purpose, he bent to search the dark eyes, frankly meeting his look. She smiled, he thought, wistfully as he said: "What you did for a comrade in distress—he will never forget. Good-by, Healer of Wounds."

Her eyes widened. Groping for his meaning, she watched him straighten, bring his hand to his forehead in a military salute, and turning, walk rapidly away. Until his tall figure was lost in the shadows, she stood, lips parted, wondering; then slowly opened the door and went in.

CHAPTER IV

Little did those whom Garth Guthrie had brought to Albany in his York boat sense what this act of friendliness to strangers might mean in days of drudgery—precious days lost from the goose hunt which was nearing its end—for the men from Elkwan. As the boat drifted down the south channel of the delta past the scrub-grown shores of Albany island, Guthrie's thoughts traversed the days since the storm and the meeting with the girl back at the Albany mission, who was going down the coast and out of his life, as the "wavies," from the Arctic, linger through the soft September weather, until the sting of the first norther sends them down the wind. But the "wavies" return. There would be no return to the west coast for Joan Quarrier.

He had left her, the night before, puzzled by the elation her promise to write him by the Christmas mail had aroused. And, always, as he strove to analyze the nature of his response to the appeal of her genuineness—her level-eyed meeting of life—the blond loveliness of Ethel, with her shrinking from the unpleasant—the inevitable—intruded with the knowledge of disillusion. Ethel was growing so vague—so shadowy—here in a land where raw life admitted of no subterfuge—no compromise. And yet, Ethel would wait for the brother of Sir Charles Guthrie, he told himself, with a tightening of the lips; of that he had no doubt.

The York boat reached the open water of the bay as the sun lifted, bringing an easterly breeze. As they worked up the channel to the post, a sense of loneliness chilled the heart of Guthrie. There would be no welcome, which, through the weeks of the summer, he had grown to cherish, on his homecoming—no joy in the wistful eyes of the girl who waited. All that remained to him now was the memory of a devotion—self-immolating, complete. Poor little Ninda!

Old Anne and the wife of Etienne stood on the shore while the voyagers made the boat fast to its buoy. As the men paddled in, it was evident that news awaited them.

"Somet'ing happen," said Etienne. "Marie ver' mooch excite' w'en she not stan' still."

"Bon jour, ladies!" called Guthrie, as he approached the chattering women on the beach. "What seems to be on your minds?"

"Oh, dey have come here—dos men!" cried old Anne.

"What men?"

"De man in de beeg boat—she was here. Dat one wid de bad face—McDonald Ha! Ha! de Injun call heem."

Guthrie and Etienne started incredulously at the speaker.

"What did he want?"

"He want talk wid you. He leave dis." Old Anne handed Guthrie a folded sheet of paper. Opening it, he read:

"The Hudson's Bay Company, Elkwan:

"This is to save you a trip to the island after the stuff left on the beach by that walrus-faced geologist, Quarrier. I can use most of it, and will pay St. John's prices for it on my return home. Have made an inventory.

"McDONALD."

"Well, he's a cool one!" commented Guthrie.

Etienne shook his black head. "He steal dat stuff, he steal all de fur on Akimiski."

"Not if I know it! If he thinks he's going to get our share of the Akimiski hunt, he'll have to fight for it. He'll find he can't bluff us," replied Guthrie, with increasing irritation at the thought of the high-handed methods of the unknown. In the north a cache was inviolate, and the stores of Quarrier on the Akimiski beach had not been abandoned, but cached, to be recovered later. McDonald's appropriation of them under the circumstances was a distinct breach of northern custom. If this was a sample of what could be expected from him later, in the fight for the Akimiski fox trade, the winter and spring would hardly be dull on the west coast. As soon as they had shot their winter supply of geese, he would have a talk with Graham and Boucher, at Attawapiskat and Kapiskau.

"Too bad, Etienne, we were not here to meet Mr. Laughing McDonald. What did you think of him, Anne? He's a big man with red hair, isn't he?"

"Oh, ver' beeg, strong man, wid hair lak fire. Hees face!" Anne stopped to shudder. "He got de crazy face all tam, from hees hurt mout'."

"Poor devil!" thought Guthrie, "branded for life with that grin! Then he asked: "Who came ashore with him?"

The question was a signal for an emotional outburst from Marie. "Dey were bad men, M'sieu Guthree. One beeg one, wid de barbe noir, black beard, he try kees me, de femme of Etienne Savanne." The black eyes of the comely wife of Etienne flashed with anger at the memory.

"W'at! Dey try dat wid you, dees peop!?" The sinewy fingers of the half-breed worked nervously as if groping for a knife handle. "W'at you do, Marie?" he demanded.

"McDonal' Ha! Ha! broke in Anne, "he talk ver' cross to de black beard—give heem push lak he was littl' boy. Dis McDonal', dey all scare of heem, dose men. Den dey paddle out to de boat."

"Good enough! McDonald seems to be boss all right," laughed Guthrie. "Black beard; that must be the Newfoundland whaler, Etienne, the captain of the schooner."

The face of Etienne hardened. "He mak mooch troubl' on dis coast—dis McDonal' Ha! Ha!—mooch troubl'."

"It looks like a lively winter for us, eh, Shot?" And the factor of Elkwan bent to rub the ears of his dog.

* * * * * * *

It was early October on the west coast, hunting weather, when the geese restlessly crossed and recrossed the wide flats between the timber and the sea, and the duck, in flocks of thousands, endlessly rose from the shallows to skirt for a space, the rim of the tide, only to settle again, and shortly repeat the flight. When they had shot two back-breaking loads, Etienne and Guthrie started for their camp out where a boulder-strewn sandspit thrusting seaward rendered the launching of a loaded canoe possible at the height of the tide. A mile from the tent on the sandspit, Etienne lifted his lowered head hanced by the tump-line which held the flour bags filled with geese. Then he swung round to the bent figure following, eyes on the ground.

"Boat at de camp."

Guthrie straightened until his range of vision included the sandspit. Below the boulders at the nose of the spit lay a ship's boat. A boat could come only from the schooner of McDonald. What were they after?

Nearing the camp, the packers dropped their loads and continued with their guns. If these people had abused Shot, chained to his stake—Guthrie's pulse quickened at the thought. Near the tent three men idled, evidently waiting for the owners.

"You keep out of this, Etienne. You're sore. Let me do the talking," warned Guthrie, as he approached the camp. Suddenly breaking into a run, he shouted: "Stop batting that dog, or I'll turn him loose on you!"

Standing out of reach, a young sailor tossed sand into the face of the infuriated airedale, straining at his leash.

"All right! Turn him loose," was the truculent reply, and retreating, the sailor cocked his shotgun.

"Put down that gun, you young fool;" commanded the elder of the three strangers to the boy, as Garth reached the camp.

"What are you people after—trouble?" demanded Guthrie, fighting for his self-control, for the badgering of his dog had left him hot.

The man addressed grinned good-naturedly and extended his hand. "Good day, Mr. Hudson's Bay; we ain't runnin' away from none. We saw your tent and rowed in to get some shells, if you have any—to sell."

Guthrie took the hand of the speaker, a heavily built man, with a beard. The anger left his face as he said: "Oh, you're not going to take the shells, then?" He was conscious, as he spoke, of the curiosity in the eyes of the man he faced, as they lingered on his scarred cheek.

"No," drawled the other. "You must think we're pirates. We pay as we go."

"But you robbed that cache on Akimiski—you left a note at Elkwan to that effect."

"McDonald will pay for that stuff—it would spoil in the rain."

"Well, we don't touch a man's cache in the north. By the way, where is this McDonald from?"

"We all hail from St. John's, Newfoundland."

"But McDonald?"

"Well, he hails from there, too," was the reply, but from the tail of his eye Guthrie caught a look in the face of the companion of the spokesman which belied the accuracy of the statement. "You say you'll sell us some shells?" continued the speaker.

"No, we can't give you any!" It was Guthrie's turn to smile. "We need every shell we've got." He glanced at the muzzles of the guns of the strangers. "Our shells wouldn't fit those cannon of yours, anyway. We use twelve gauge guns with No. 6 shot. At close range it gets more geese than this big stuff.

"McDonald gets 'em with a Lewis—fires a burst into a flock and kills a half dozen."

"So you've got Lewis guns, eh?" abruptly demanded Garth.

"Oh, yes! We're heeled, if you people should take the notion to try to run us out of the bay."

"Why, man! you've got as much right here as we have, but if you don't play straight, we'll run you out—that's all."

The blue eyes of the sailor met the chill gaze of the soldier in a long, unwavering stare, and from that mutual appraisal, the reaction in the mind of each man was identical.

"You may—but you'll sweat some. Now, I want to give you fair warning that some of your people have come to us this summer of their own accord. There's an Injun who claims you stole his daughter—"

"What! That skunk of an Ojibwa? He tells you that?" Guthrie sickened at the thought of Ninda's memory being made the catspaw of Indian gossip.

"That's what he claims. It's none of my business, but he's got it in for you, so don't blame us. He's working for us, of course, for the fur."

"A girl he claimed as his daughter came to Elkwan in June, dying with tuberculosis," said Garth quietly. "She couldn't travel—we took care of her till she died. He tried to hold me up—for stuff. I kicked him out, so he wants his revenge. Just tell him, Mr. —" "Skene," prompted the other. "Just tell him for me, Mr. Skene, that I'll give him to the dog if he shows up at the post. He knows Shot."

"Looks like a tough old veteran!" commented Skene, admiringly, glancing at the airedale, tense as a statue, hair and tail up, bristling at his stake.

"He is. He's an overseas man. He'd tear that Indian's throat out in one snap."

"There's another matter, too," continued Garth. "When your people came to Elkwan when we were down the coast, one of them—fellow with a black beard—tried something that will get him knifed if he shows up at the post again." At the words, Etienne slowly moved up to a position beside Guthrie, his right hand resting carelessly on his hip, the fingers touching the bone handle of his sheath knife. The bearded leader of the sailors glanced curiously at the flint-like face of the half-breed, and smiled indifferently at the threat. "Just tell him for me, will you, to keep away from Elkwan?"

"Oh, you mean Black Breault. He's sailing master—owns the schooner. I'm the mate. He's a bit rough, I'll admit, but don't make any mistake about who's boss. McDonald's running this party."

"That's why I'm asking you to tell McDonald that we won't stand for manhandling women on this coast," insisted Guthrie.

"Right-o, I'll tell him. Well, we'll be off," said the big sailor, offering his hand, which Garth shook. "I'm glad to meet a reasonable Hudson's Bay man and one who wasn't sitting snug on the bay when we had our backs to the wall in front of Amiens."

And as Garth stood pondering the remark, Skene turned and joining his men, walked to his boat with a limp. He, too, thought the man who watched, is wearing his service stripe. The sailors launched their boat in the rising tide, and poling it out to the deeper water, rowed away.

So the memory of Ninda was to be mouthed on evil tongues? The story was going out among the Crees that the factor of Elkwan had taken her from her family. It was the kind of tale only too readily believed. Judging from the coolness of Swan, the missionary, Quarrier, without doubt, had published it in Albany; soon it would be the property of the whole west coast. Poor, loyal Ninda! Then, the thought of one who had seen and understood came like a breath of clean air from the spruce. He saw her again, her heavy hair touched by the moonlight, her fine, dark eyes with the questioning look, as she said: "Good-by, Mr. Exile!"

Dogs' Fare Regulated

Dogs not measuring more than two feet may ride on busses in Paris and on street cars in Vienna, if they pay full fare, according to a note in Gas Logic.

Start of New York Giants Very Small

"And from little acorns mighty oaks shall grow."

Jim ("Truthful Jeems") Mutrie landed in New York city in 1883 with very little money—but he had a scheme. He met John B. Day and proposed that they place some sort of a co-operative baseball team on the Polo grounds in New York city. Day furnished $500 while Mutrie furnished the hustling.

From this small beginning the now powerful organization representing that city in the National league got its start.

RELIEF MEN HAVE LABORIOUS TASK

Their Jobs More Necessary Than Enviable on Club.

In most well-conducted omces there are employees who toil so faithfully and efficiently that they are almost indispensable to the success of the enterprise yet receive little reward in fame or coin of the realm. The business of baseball also has such workers. They are the lads who spend their afternoons in the bull pen ready to rush to the rescue if their more brilliant pitching brothers should weaken.

Their jobs are more necessary than enviable. Too often the records blame them for losing a game which only a miracle could have saved. When they do come through, which is quite frequently, the credit is apt to go to some one else.

In the past baseball has known some very capable relief moundsmen, and the comparative standard is high. Probably among the best known are Garland Braxton and Fred Marberry of the Senators and George Mogridge, who, like the wise man that he is, left the Braves to manage Rochester.

Then there are Rube Ehrhardt and Norman Plitt of Brooklyn's Robins. For four years Rube has viewed most of the Dodgers' games from the bull pens situated in the lee of the right or left field bleachers. This season Plitt has been a far more constant companion than a wife.

Giles Runs Fast

Charlie Giles, above, is one of the crack two-milers of the University of Pennsylvania, and every day after studies can be seen practicing on the track. But it is what he does besides this that is interesting. For the past two years he has been up bright and early in the morning, delivering papers on a route. He skims down the streets with his armful and then is off to school to his studies.

Two Macs Attempt Comeback

Photograph shows, left to right, Matt McGrath and Pat McDonald, two ex-cops and famous weight throwers who were in competition before many of the present-day athletes were born, as they appeared at the National A. A. U. championships held in the stadium of the University of Nebraska. The two Macs, as they are affectionately termed, are attempting a comeback against athletes young enough to be their sons. MacGrath was placed fourth in the hammer throw.

Once Star Sprinter Now Sparkling in Business

Providence, R. I., has one answer to what becomes of athletic stars after they hang up their sport togs and put aside their spiked shoes. Norman S. Taber ran a mile in 4 minutes, 12 and 3-5 seconds in 1912. This stood as a world's record until Paavo Nurmi bettered it in 1923.

Long before his title passed to the "Flying Finn," Taber had abandoned the cinder track to star in business. He is now a business executive, trustee of a co-operative bank, trustee of Brown university, chairman of Brown's athletic council, and member of several educational and welfare committees. While making athletic records for Brown, Taber also won a Rhodes scholarship.

Golf Has Its Ups and Also Its Downs

Just in case there may still be some doubt in your mind as to whether golf remains our most inconsistent sport, the following might be brought to your attention: Tommy Armour, who scored 76, 73, 76, 76 to tie for the national open and then showed consistency by winning the play-off with another 76, went on a course probably four strokes easier in his very next start and took an 80 for the first round in the Shawnee open. And Johnny Farrell, one of the favorites for the big play at Oakmont, who stubbed his toe on the first round with an 81, went on to set the pace with an excellent 68 in the same tourney in which Armour took his 80.

Bespectacled Horse

The turf game of horse racing now has its Lee Meadows, bespectacled pitcher of the big leagues. Photograph shows Berosus, two-year-old horse belonging to E. R. Bradley, the well-known Kentucky horseman, wearing the glasses he has been outfitted with, when it was determined that the nag had faulty eyes.

Steve Donoghue Adds to His Many Turf Laurels

To many triumphs he has gained on the famous race course at Epsom, Steve Donoghue made a notable addition recently in winning the two chief handicaps at the meeting, scoring on Kinnaird in the Great Metropolitan and on Embargo in the city and suburban. Donoghue has won the Derby four times at Epsom, the city and suburban three times, while he has captured numerous other important races.

The Great Metropolitan is always a picturesque event to watch, for the runners start opposite the stands, run down the straight and then thread their way across the downs until they join the Derby course at the one-mile starting post, the distance being two miles, which is finished on the regular course.

Filipinos Win Favor in American Boxing Arenas

The Filipinos rose to popularity in the American boxing arenas because they loved to fight.

The boxing game had been put on a business basis in this country, with boxers demanding excessive pay and giving the customers minimum returns, when Pancho Villa appeared. Pancho, one of the most colorful scrappers of all time, was different. He fought from gong to gong. He seemed to glory in battle. There was no stalling about Villa, no clinching, no pulling of punches.

The Filipinos who came after Villa were similar. There was none of his ability, but they did fight. The tactics of American boxers were foreign to them.

Coast Team Reunited

William M. Johnston and Clarence J. Griffin, winners of the national doubles tennis title in 1915, 1916 and 1920, have teamed up again. Johnston announces that he and his fellow San Franciscan would participate in the big eastern tournaments this summer. As a starter, the pair won the Pacific Coast doubles title. Johnston paired with Edward "Bud" Chandler last year and ended the season second in national rankings. Johnston and Griffin will do well this year.

TWO HOMES MADE HAPPY

By Women Who Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I think it is the most wonderful medicine I ever tried," is the statement made by Mrs. Goldie Shoup of St. Joseph, Illinois. She declares that after taking the Compound she is in better health than before.

Mrs. J. Storms of 29 Lane Street, Paterson, N. J., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of your medicine and I recommend it to all my friends."

These statements were taken from two enthusiastic letters which tell of the help that has been received from using the Vegetable Compound. Both Mrs. Shoup and Mrs. Storms were in a run-down condition which caused them much unhappiness. When women are suffering from lack of strength and from weakness, their own life and that of their family is affected. When they feel well and strong and are able to do their housework easily, happy homes are the result.

Undertaker Had Best of Bid for Business

Thomas A. Dwer, president of the New York Rotary club, said at a banquet:

"There's such a thing, after all, as carrying business methods too far.

"A business man sent for the doctor. The doctor looked him over and said:

"'You're pretty sick, sir, but I believe I can cure you.'

"'What will you charge, doc?' groaned the business man, 'for a full cure?'

"'Well,' said the doctor, 'it's rather irregular to estimate in this way, but I'm ready to cure you for $200.'

"The business man shook his head weakly on the pillow. Then he managed with great difficulty to articulate:

"'You'll have to shade that price considerable, doc. I got a darn sight better bid from the undertaker.'"

WHAT TO SEE IN TOKIO

A Studious Tokyo Newsboy.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

TO GET a mental picture of Tokyo one must hold clearly in mind that Japan's capital is not really a city but a collection of towns and villages, grown together. These settlements preserve their entity in the 15 "wards" frequently mentioned in dispatches relating events in the city.

Tokyo has a peculiar sentimental tie with our own national capital, because the Japanese cherry blossom trees in Potomac park, in Washington, constituted a gift to us, which was recognized by sending to Tokyo a consignment of American dogwood trees. There they form an annual magnet for thousands of Japanese residents at the time of their blooming.

When one sails up the bay of Tokyo to Yokohama, and buys a railroad ticket to Tokyo, he senses the distinctive group form of Japan's capital. For the ticket reads "Shinagawa," or "Shinbashi," not "Tokyo."

The Imperial palace is in the aristocratic ward, or "Ku," known as Kojimochi-Ku. In this palace, originated by Ota Dokwan in 1456, formerly lived the Tokugawa Shoguns. This palace bears witness to the frequent casualties of Tokyo; it often was burned, the last time in 1873. It is not accessible to the public. A Japanese guide-book naively says, "Ordinary people are allowed to approach only as far as the end of the first bridge outside the outer gate." The palace grounds are surrounded by two moats; the perimeter of the outer one is about five miles. In this ward also is the central railway station, with buildings occupying two acres. One of four entrances is reserved for the use of the imperial family.

The Latin quarter of Tokyo lies in Kanda-Ku. Here is the Tokyo Higher Commercial school, the first school of that kind established by the government when it launched upon a policy of adopting western business methods. Upon the grounds of this school grow pine trees which are survivors of the grove standing there when the school tract was part of the Shogun's pleasure park. This ward also is famous for a willow-tree thoroughfare, its second-hand clothes stores, and a Shinto shrine which dates to the Eighth century.

It Is an "Official" City.

While each ward retains distinctive characteristics of the time when it was a separate town, and each has its own business section, Tokyo as a whole has a distinctive individuality. It is an "official" city, and frankly so.

Official hours, official guides, official guide books and official seasons for various sights and scenes are officially proclaimed. You come away with a sense of having been officially conducted through a fairyland of cherry blossoms, of noisy lotus flowers that bloom with a detonation, of doll's festivals, of Geisha girl dances.

The old survives alongside the new. The Geisha girl continues to perform though the cafeteria has made its advent in Tokyo. The Geisha girl is an institution hard for the western mind to comprehend. Her most comparable functionary in the western world was the court jester—long since passed away. She is a modern prototype of the private entertainers of wealthy medieval nobles. She is of a class different from the women of Japan who cling to their semiseclusion amid the inroads of modernism; but she is not of the type which westerners class as the demimonde.

Restaurants and tea houses in Tokyo still have their Geisha girls. The Japanese business man, student, official, or visiting farmer are the patrons. More often it is a party of men friends whom the Geisha girl entertains with song, dance and monologue, and for whom she acts as a sort of hostess.

Custom does not fill these restaurants with husbands and wives, men and their fiancees, or friends of opposite sexes, as in America. But the wish to have members of the other sex present is just as strong in Japan as elsewhere. Hence the Geisha girl.

Outside the pervading sense of official regulation there is infinite variety in Tokyo. Exclusive Kajimachi is very different from bourgeoise Kanda. Busy, bustling Mihombashi, with its "Broadway" and "Billingsgate" is a far cry from Shiba, village of the tower gate and giant hill, native restaurants and distinctive dances.

Easy To Find Your Way Around.

For the humble traveler by the tram, it is exceedingly difficult to get lost in Tokyo. Each car bears the number of its route and inside, at the place where, in America, one would see hosiery and washing powder advertisements, there is a comprehensive map of the city criss-crossed and circled by lines of many colors corresponding to the numbered routes. A knowledge of the language is superfluous. From the guide-book map, or better from the free map furnished by the Japan Tourist bureau, which seeks to make Japanese travel delightful, one locates the place he seeks and the place where he stands. Then it is a mere matter of matching numbers and colors to any spot within the circular railway which forms the rim of the transportation wheel.

This idea of placing a map of the city in the cars themselves instead of on some sequestered wall around the station may rob the traveler of the cultural advantages of tempting pictures of butter and motor cars, but it makes it easy to wander from village to village within the city limits with the minimum of delay and sign language.

Nihombashi is a principal business quarter of the city, although each of the wards is more independent, commercially, than the various sections of most cities. The center of Nihombashi and of Tokyo, is the bridge which in olden times was a measuring point for distances to places throughout the empire. Formerly it was wood; it was rebuilt in 1911 of granite. It is the thoroughfare from each end of this bridge which popularly is known as "Broadway."

In Nihombashi is the Bank of Japan, occupying a building especially designed to be earthquake-proof. One part of the building has three stories underground for strong boxes, and this part can be flooded as protection against fire. In this same section of modern banks and office buildings is a Shinto shrine where charms are dispensed which are supposed to be efficacious in such diverse emergencies as shipwreck, child delivery and being the victim of a liar.

"Newspaper Row" is in Kyobashi-Ku. Here are practically all the principal journals. Shiba-Ku contains the mortuary temples of the Tokugawa Shoguns. A concession to foreign visitors is indicated by the announcement, "Boots need not be taken off, as covers are provided to slip over them."

In Azabu-Ku is a Buddhist temple, memento of the years before Shintoism took firm hold. Shintoism has been kept alive in Japan from the dawn of the empire. Tokyo, as Japan's capital, became a stronghold of Shintoism because officialdom of Japan support it ardently.

Three Dangers to the City.

The introduction of western buildings greatly enhanced the danger from earthquakes in Tokyo. The fragile houses might be burned and often were, but could not maim their occupants under piles of mortar and stone. Fireproof warehouses were provided for groups of such buildings and when the alarm of fire was sounded the occupants carried off their valuables to these storage places.

Tokyo has had three particular furies of her own to harry her over and over again: pestilence, fire and earthquake. From the close of the Sixteenth century when the old fishing village of Yedo blossomed into a city at the order of the ruling Shogun, these three have from time to time taken heavy toll of life, and the latter two, of property.

Perhaps the most terrible of the many fires that have destroyed great blocks of the inflammable houses of Tokyo occurred in 1657 when 107,000 persons are said to have lost their lives in the flames. The number of palaces destroyed is placed at 500 and the residences of other nobles at more than 700, while between 300 and 400 temples were burned.

Ancient Drawbridges

The portcullis of castles of medieval times were hung so as to slide up and down in grooves with counterbalances. They were made of strong-framed grating of oaks, the lower points shod with iron. Sometimes they were made entirely of metal. The drawbridge was raised by chains and counterweights attached to levers projecting from the wall at a proper distance above it. The levers were elevated by heavy weights attached to their inner extremities, the wall forming the fulcrum.

His Version

Little Billy, aged three, was sitting with his father and mother in front of the grate one evening when his father remarked that the fire in the grate was dying down. Little Billy spoke up and said, "Yes, daddy, there is a little fire in the grate, but not much—the much went out."—Indianapolis News.

WHY JEAN WAS BLUE

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

JEAN LEMAN was blue as indigo. As a matter of fact, she was jealous—hopelessly, heart-breakingly jealous. She stood at the ranch house window, watching Perry ride off with Phyllis Sharmon, the baby-faced eastern girl, who had arrived to be "Pa" Leman's paying guest for a month. Phyllis was clad absurdly in a smartly tailored broadcloth habit and was riding Jean's own special pony. Moreover Jean had not been consulted in the matter, so it was simply adding insult to injury. Phyllis was or pretended to be, a novice at riding, and seemed to require considerable instruction from her escort. Perry had been Pa Leman's right-hand man at the ranch for six months now, and had spent most of his spare hours during that time with Jean. And yet he appeared to Jean's hurt and bewildered eyes to be absolutely delighted with his new role of guide and instructor to the pertly attractive stranger.

Jean's eyes grew misty with tears and her heart felt pitifully heavy as she thought of the difference between her present depression and her excited happiness just twenty-four hours earlier. The evening before she had gone with Perry, as she had gone dozens of times, to see that the horses were safe for the night. Just before they returned to the house Jean had stumbled and was suddenly held tight in Perry's strong arms. The very remembrance of the kiss that followed made Jean's heart beat faster even now. It was her first kiss, and though no words had been spoken, Jean had lain awake far into the night, thrilled with vision of a wedding and a possible honeymoon in that far visionary city of New York. And now, this—Perry had gone to meet the eastern girl before Jean was up that morning and had been with her constantly ever since. He had no right to take it for granted that Jean's pony should be the one for Phyllis Sharmon to ride. She wished the girl had stayed in the East, where she belonged.

Jean went to bed before the riders returned. Perry's laugh and a giggle from Phyllis floated up to her just as she was dropping off to sleep and kept her miserably awake for hours.

Perry stopped her next morning to ask:

"Not angry, are you, Jean?" And such a lump came into Jean's throat that she was helpless to answer and turned back to hide her tears. Then Phyllis claimed his attention, and Jean didn't see him alone all day.

And so it went on for days, until Jean was just an aching bit of hopeless misery. Wanting desperately to conceal her unhappiness from Perry, yet utterly unable to be her old natural self, she answered him so shortly when he did speak to her that he soon avoided her altogether. Sometimes she fancied she saw a hurt, questioning look in his eyes, but always became convinced later that it must have been her imagination. Certainly he seemed to get along famously with Phyllis, and Jean's resentment toward the other girl grew into a bitterness that was more than dislike.

One evening Perry had ridden over to a neighboring ranch on some business for Pa Leman. Jean was just feeling a grim satisfaction in the thought that at least Phyllis couldn't be with him, when the eastern girl came in, dressed for riding. She spoke to Jean, coolly patronizing.

"Saddle my pony, will you, Jean. I'm going to ride over to meet Perry.

The rage that suddenly surged into Jean's heart frightened her. She went out of the house to the stable. She hated the pretty eastern girl with her plucked eyebrows and her toored lips—what right had she to steal away Jean's whole life's happiness? "My pony," she said. It was Jean's pony. Phyllis had appropriated the pony as coolly as she had the man. Jean's eyes fell on the little horse that Pa Leman had recently brought home for Perry to break in. It was almost a counterpart in size and color of Jean's own pony. He was becoming accustomed to the saddle, but Pa Leman had forbidden Jean to ride him. Jean's lips were set in a determined line, and her eyes gleamed dangerously. Phyllis would never know the difference between the two ponies in the dusky light of approaching darkness. Let the patronizing little eastern heartbreaker ride the forbidden pony and test the value of the riding lessons that Perry had given her. She saddled the horse without much difficulty and led him with beating heart to the house, where she helped Phyllis to mount and stood watching her ride off. She was all right while the pony was walking, but let her try to keep her seat once the horse broke into gallop.

Then when the waves of anger which had enveloped her had subsided Jean was simply overwhelmed with remorse. She thought she had suffered before, but her former misery was nothing compared to the despair that filled her heart as a succession of pictured disasters passed before her mental vision. How could she have been so utterly insane? Phyllis would be killed and Jean would be responsible. Should she saddle her own pony and ride after her? But that would be a confession. There was nothing else she could do. It was quite dark now and she stood in the doorway, straining her eyes to see across the sage brush, just waiting and waiting—for what, she hardly dared to think.

When, at last, she heard some one riding toward the house she turned cold with apprehension. It was Perry—Perry, holding a limp figure on the saddle before him! Jean could scarcely force herself to walk down the steps to meet him as he came toward her with Phyllis in his arms. Her voice was faint with terror—

"Oh, Perry! She's not—killed?"

Perry shook his head and pushed past her into the house. Jean followed him up the stairs and watched in terrified silence while he laid the unconscious girl on the bed. Then Perry dashed off for the nearest doctor and Jean sat beside Phyllis in an agony of suspense, sending out little wordless prayers for the girl's recovery. It was terrible to think that, loving Perry as she did, she was perhaps responsible for the wrecking of his happiness. How could she ever atone?

Perry and the doctor came at last. The minutes dragged into hours while Jean and Perry waited outside the bedroom door. Then, when the doctor opened the door and gave Jean a reassuring smile Jean's face went white and she swayed unsteadily. Perry looked at her surprised—

"Why, Jean, did she mean so much to you?"

The doctor told them that Phyllis was badly bruised, but there was nothing serious, and left them.

Jean turned to Perry—"If you only knew!"

Perry said hesitatingly: "It was sort of lucky that I happened along when I did. Miss Phyllis had dismounted and was walking too close to the cliff above the river—"

Jean's eyes widened and she clutched at Perry's hands.

"Do you mean that the horse didn't throw her—that she fell herself?"

Then as Perry nodded she sighed, deeply in relieved thankfulness and went on:

"Perry I knew now that I only want you to be happy—"

Perry's face lighted up, and he put his arms quickly around her.

"Well, Jean, I guess you know what I need to make me happy."

"But I thought—that Phyllis—"

Perry laughed joyously. "Why, you little goose—do you mean to say that you've been jealous? And all the time I thought you were angry because I kissed you!"

And so, with their second kiss, all of Jean's "blue devils" faded away to parts unknown and life took on a roseate hue once more.

Nothing to Brag Of

At a plantation on the Savannah river, where he was a guest, Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and his host were enjoying their after-dinner cigar and commenting on the beauties of the scenery, when the moon rose over the bayou. The doctor exclaimed:

"Look at that great, mellow, warm, tropical moon, big as a cartwheel. Up in Vermont that moon wouldn't be bigger than a pint cup and it would be all hung over with icicles."

"I don't wonder that the South develops temperament, that poets and artists and orators come from the South when you have that beautiful mellow moon to look at."

The colonel gazed sadly on the moon and replied:

"You like that moon, doctor? You just orter seen that moon befo' the wah."

The New Science

Secretary Parker Moon, of the New York Academy of Political Science, was discussing the enormous campaign expenditures of certain candidates.

"These chaps," he said, "don't seem to understand political economy."

Then he laughed and went on:

"A boy said to his father:

"'Pop, what's political economy, anyhow?'

"'Political economy?' said the father. 'Why, any fool ought to know that political economy is the science of not buyin' any more votes nor payin' no higher for 'em than wot you actually need.'"

Service Rendered by Gull Now Appreciated

There was a time when the gull was slaughtered and the feathers used to adorn milady's headgear. Their eggs also were eaten and the young, when salted, made a palatable winter dish. In the early days of Wellfleet, Mass., the gulls were captured in the gull-house and the small birds killed by means of a frying pan and fire at night. But the great value of the gulls was gradually realized. They consumed shoals of fish and other sea animals, sometimes stranded ashore. They continue to perform this invaluable service.

Some leave shore and keep vigil behind the farmer's plow, snapping up grubs and other destructive insects. They devour grasshoppers and locusts, as well as field mice and other rodent pests. Fishermen are indebted to them, for the gulls, by their presence, indicate where the food-fish are. And, in foggy weather, they send a warning cry to mariners and fishermen from their breeding places in dangerous rocks and ledges.

There are 50 species of gulls known, 26 of them found in North America. Many of the American species flock in great hordes to Wellfleet bay and ocean shores and to many ponds.

Auxiliary Has "Date Book"

The Rock Springs (Wyo.) auxiliary of the American Legion is conducting a community "date book." Dates of all community functions to be held by the various organizations of the city are listed in the book, and through this conflicting dates can be avoided, insuring better attendance at the events of each organization.

Legion Band Lends Aid

As a result of a plan formulated by the Stillwater (Minn.) American Legion band last fall, by which high school students desiring to learn to play band instruments could receive instruction, a high school band of 20 pieces has been formed. The work was part of the Legion's community service activities.

POULTRY FACTS

POULTRY NEEDS CARE IN SUMMER

Though egg production drops in hot weather the poultry flock should receive attention so that best results may be secured when production starts on the upgrade again.

"The decline in egg production begins in June," says Dr. B. F. Kaupp, head of the poultry department of the North Carolina agricultural college. "We estimate that each hen will average about 13 eggs during this month. The breeding season is also over in June and it is a wise plan to sell all the old male birds not needed for another season. Those males that are wanted should be placed in a separate field with plenty of range and a comfortable small house. The male is not needed for egg production, and when he is kept away from the flock, infertile eggs are produced. An infertile egg keeps better in hot weather than a fertile egg. In any case, it is wise to gather the eggs frequently and market them at least twice each week. For best prices, they should be kept clean and cool."

Doctor Kaupp suggests that it might be a good idea to caponize a few of the early cockerels and grow them out on range this summer for the holiday trade. Capons are in demand around Thanksgiving and Chrismas, and with a little care, a good trade in capons may be built up.

When birds are dipped to control body pests, a warm day should be selected and a solution of 1 per cent coal tar dip used. The house should be well ventilated. Open the rear ventilators but do not permit a draft to blow across the birds.

Red mites play havoc with the vitality of the farm flock, states Doctor Kaupp. For this reason it is not a bad plan to paint the perch poles with pure dip or some used cylinder oil that has been diluted with kerosene.

All birds need plenty of shade and fresh clean water during summer, and the poultryman who does not provide these simple necessities makes a serious mistake, advises Doctor Kaupp.

Cause of Heavy Death Rate of Young Chicks

Ninety per cent of the sick and dead chicks received by the veterinary department of Purdue university during March and April of this year, had bacillary white diarrhea. These chicks came from 1,000 flocks. In most cases the letters that accompanied the different lots indicated that the owners did not suspect the true cause of the heavy death rate, and most of them believed that the feed was responsible for the loss.

The name "bacillary white diarrhea" is somewhat misleading. Many poultrymen believe that it is a disease of the intestines and the sick chicks always show a diarrhea. As a matter of fact, there is very little evidence of bowel trouble, either in the form of symptoms or lesions, in the most destructive outbreaks and the highly acute cases. Birds that survive the infection for several days or a week show lesions in the liver, lungs, heart and intestines. The lungs are commonly affected. This gives rise to difficult or labored breathing, and poultrymen have frequently mistaken bacillary white diarrhea for brooder pneumonia, a less common disease.

Teaching Chicks to Roost Prevents Crooked Bones

Teach the chicks to roost. Crooked breast bones may be the result of too early roosting on roosts which do not support the body, but a 2 by 2 inch scantling with the upper edges slightly rounded, placed at about a foot from the floor at first, will not cause crooked breast bones and will prevent huddling in corners and piling up. Teaching the chicks to roost is bother: it means going to the brood coops before dark and putting up the chicks that have gone to the corners. But once they are roost-trained, there is little danger of chicks piling up even though we have the occasional cold night which plays havoc with chicks in cold coops.

Time to Caponize

The time to caponize is when the cockerel is 1½ to 2½ pounds in weight or two to four months of age. Slips result when a part of one of the testicles is not removed. Beginners sometimes have as many as 50 per cent of slips. Next year you will probably have better success. When a capon fails to develop it is not because they were caponized too young but probably due to worms or some physical defect not apparent to a casual glance or examination.

Intestinal Worm Cure

Tobacco dust may be used in the treatment of intestinal worm infestation of young chicks after they are six or eight weeks of age. It should be used as it is with older birds, 1 pound of dust of not less than 1 per cent nicotine content to each 50 pounds of mash. It should not be assumed that either chicks or older fowls have worms in sufficient numbers to do harm without an examination of the interior of the intestines of one or more dead birds.

Late Hatched Chick

There is a definite place for the late hatched chick. Most people prefer the early chicks. However, the late hatched chicks fit into the equipment and methods of many people better than the earlier chicks. Chicks which come later in the season are often more vigorous than the extremely early ones. Their parents have been out in the sunshine more and there should be more stored up vitamines in the eggs from which they came, a most desirable element.

MENLO PARK

Corner Stone Laid Saturday

The corner stone of the Corpus Christi Monastery was laid last Saturday afternoon with impressive ceremony. About five hundred people witnessed the service that was performed by Monsignor Ryan, the vicar general of the diocese. After the tin box was placed in the large stone that was laid by the contractor, Father Ryan turned to the large assemblage and delivered a very appropriate and very eloquent address telling in simple language the great work of the nuns who were to occupy the new monastery. He told of how the prayers of these holy devout women would ascend to heaven to the great Master for the benefit of mankind and would be effectual before the Great White Throne and when the day of judgment approached it would be seen that many would be enrolled with the blessed through the prayers of these pious and holy nuns.

Many representatives of the religious orders of the diocese were present, including the Dominican Sisters of San Rafael, lay sisters from the Corpus Christi Monastery on Eddie street, San Francisco. The head of the Dominican Order on the coast and several other Dominican priests and a number of the clergy about the bay.

In the corner stone an illuminated parchment scroll was placed Just before the tin box was closed Joseph A. Donohoe stepped forward and signed the scroll. This will tell the history of the foundation. A Dominican rosary some medals, a copy of a prayer to St. Emygdius, two fragments o stone from the first monastery o the Mominican Nuns at Priullie France, and crumbled wood from a beam from the house in which St. Dominic lived in Fangeaux, France, also was placed in the corner stone, together with a copy of the Times-Gazette, containing an account of the purchase of the land on which the monastery is to be located and a brief history of the Corpus Christi Order.

In the monastery about to be erected at Menlo Park, a list of donors written on parchment, will be sealed under the marble slab

To Repair and Construct Sewers

At a meeting of the Menlo Park Sanitary Board held last Monday evening a bond election was called to raise the sum of $40,000 for the reconstruction of old sewers and the construction of new ones. New sewers are to be constructed on Middle avenue, Santa Cruz avenue, Valparaiso avenue, Stanford Park, the Doyle tract and other places. The old sewer on Johnson, Crane, Emelia and Fremont avenues, owned by private parties is to be taken over by the board and reconstructed and improved. This improvement of the sanitary district is needed and the board is to be commended for its progressive policy. The growing population in this district has to be taken care by giving good sanitary regulations. The election is to take place this fall and when the bonds are sold, work on the system is to begin at once.

Bridge Luncheon

Last Saturday afternoon at the San Francisco Woman's Club, Miss Loreto Harrington gave a bridge luncheon in honor of her girl friends. About thirty-five guests were present, all receiving a great surprise. In the midst of the function the announcement of the engagement of the pretty hostess and Charles D. Gregory of Berkeley was made. The wedding will be an event of the late fall The wedding is to be the culmination of a romance began may years ago at Berkeley when both young people were children Miss Harrington in her girlhood spent many months each year at the home of her grandmother in Berkeley and it was in those days that Cupid, the little God of love, began his pranks that is to result in making two hearts beat as one. Miss Harrington is the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Harrington of Menlo Park and is an unusually charming young woman.

Mr. Gregory is a graduate of the University of California and is engaged in business in Berkeley, where he has a host of friends. After the marriage the young couple will likely reside in the latter place.

Removed to San Francisco

Felix McGinnis and family, who have occupied the McClimant place during the summer, have moved back to the city, so that their children may attenl school when it opens next week. Mr. McGinnis is the traffic manager of the Southern Pacific Company. His summers are usually spent in Menlo Park.

Not only is it noted for its excellent climate but it is also famous for the number of statesmen that have resided here. Menlo Park has had five U. S. senators living here at various times from the early seventies to the present. They were Senator Milton S. Latham, Senator Leland Stanford Senator Charles N. Felton, Senator Samuel M. Shortridge, the incumbent, and Senator C. C. Lowe, who lived in the old Burke home now the Donohoe estate opposite the Church of the Nativity in the seventies. It looks now as if the next president of the United States would come from Menlo Park Herbert Hoover. Menlo Park may well claim him for he lives on the Stanford eminence in the Stanford campus overlooking Menlo Park and the residence is much nearer this place than Palo Alto, so that we may lay claim to him as a citiden of this community. As a young man attending Stanford in the nineties he spent much of his leisure time here and in the early days was well known to every resident of Menlo Park. Hoover is a self-made man in every respect. While attending college he worked his way through the institution by working as a day laborer both here and in Palo Alto. After his graduation he also was employed in the mines of Calavares county. His rise to fame has been by hard work and careful attention to duty. Hoover looms as strong presidential timber. The east wants him, the south craves him and he has the west, so it would seem that Hoover has an edge on the Republican nomination which means his election. Hoover would, owing to his vast experience and knowledge of international affairs make an excellent chief executive. Let us hope the next president will come from Menlo Park.

$7000 Pumping Plant Installed

Herbert Fleishhacker, is putting a $7,000 pumping plant on his estate at Atherton to secure a greater supply of water. The big plant is being installed by Joseph P. Ahlert. All the wells at Atherton are becoming low and practically running out on the owners, so that it becomes necessary to deepen them. Many owners are drifting their wells to a depth of from 400 to 500 feet and find by this means a good supply of water is being secured. Fleishhaker has a splendid well having bored it to a depth of over 500 feet. The new home for the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fleishhacker on the estate was started this week. When finished it will cost $50,000.
